Dedication

To the profound women who have contributed to my life and inspired my soul, the trailblazers, the resilient ones, and the leaders. For the women who dare to dream, who refuse to be silenced, and who rise above adversity. To my sisters, my friends, and the women who have paved the way. May Evelyn's journey empower you to rise as the alpha woman you were meant to be, embracing your strength, wisdom, and power. May this book fuel your journey to greatness, and may the alpha female within you rise strong and proud, knowing that: “Somebody has to remind Everybody that Anybody can make a difference, even a Nobody.”

Preface

The boundary between the world we know and the mysteries we fear is often as thin as a line of code—or the crest of a breaking wave. We have long looked toward the horizon, not merely to see where the sky meets the sea, but to wonder who we become when the structures of our past are stripped away by the storm.

In the 21st century, we seek to build mirrors of our own intelligence through robotics and science, pushing the status quo of engineering until the mechanical begins to touch the soul. But as Evelyn Ethan discovered, every journey toward progress carries an unexpected weight. When the wreckage of the familiar sinks beneath the tides, we are forced to ask: what remains of the architect when the blueprints are lost?

This story is not merely about a shipwrecked engineer stranded on the island of Kyrallion; it is about the resilience of the human spirit in the face of an unfamiliar odyssey. It is about a society of guardians who have kept the flame of tradition alive, and the outsider who must find the courage to bridge the divide between two worlds. From the suffocating darkness of the stormy sea to the crimson hues of a Kyrallion sunset, it is a testament to the belief that leadership is not found in a title, but in the choices we make when the world demands a new dawn.

We are the authors of our own history, but we are also the keepers of one another's strength. As you turn these pages, remember that the most profound difference is often made by those the world once considered a "nobody".

Welcome to Kyrallion. The tide is rising.

Prelude

In the heart of the ocean, where the sun dips into the sea and paints the sky with hues of crimson and gold, lies the island of Kyralion. A place of ancient wonders, where the whispers of the past weave through the palm trees and the waves hold secrets of the deep.

Here, the women are the guardians of tradition, the keepers of the flame. They are the matriarchs, the leaders, and the heart of the island. Theirs is a society of strength, resilience, and wisdom, forged in the fires of history and tempered by the power of the sea.

But beneath the surface of this tranquil paradise, tensions simmer. The winds of change are stirring, and the island's delicate balance is about to be disrupted. A new leader will emerge, one who will challenge the status quo and forge a new path for Kyralion.

The time of reckoning is near. The alpha female is rising.

Chapter 1: The Wreckage

The darkness of the stormy night was suffocating, like a living entity wrapping itself around Evelyn's throat. As the ship creaked and groaned, protesting the merciless assault of the stormy sea, waves crashed against the hull, threatening to splinter the wood into a thousand pieces. Evelyn Ethan clung to the railing, her knuckles white, as the tempest raged on. The howling wind and the creaking of the ship's wooden hull filled her ears.

She had been on this ship for hours, traveling to a meeting for a robotic project exhibition. This meeting would define her career status in the world of engineering and science, potentially changing the course of her career in the 21st century.

Suddenly, a loud crack echoed through the air, followed by the sound of splintering wood. Evelyn's world turned upside down as the ship lurched violently. She lost her grip and tumbled across the deck, her head spinning, and then she lost consciousness. The other passengers scrambled for their lives as the ship began taking in more water. Somehow, Evelyn regained consciousness.

When she finally came to, Evelyn found herself disoriented and alone in a vast body of water. She was in the middle of nowhere. The storm had passed, leaving an eerie calm in its wake. She struggled to take control of the floating surface she found herself on. A kind passenger had helped her onto the floating board. As she assessed her surroundings, she noticed the wreckage of the ship with debris scattered across the water. She was alone, with no sign of rescue in sight.

Panic set in as Evelyn scanned the horizon. Where was she? How far from land? Would anyone come to save her? As the sun beat down on her, Evelyn's thoughts turned to her family, her friends, and her life before the shipwreck. Would she ever see them again? She struggled to remain focused, gazing out at the endless blue expanse and wondering if this would be her last day on earth. However, memories began to flood her mind—memories of her childhood, her family, and her struggles.

Evelyn Ethan, a single young lady in her mid-30s, had grown up in a tough neighborhood raised by her loving mother, Janiyah, and her beloved father, Ethan. Despite the challenges they faced, Janiyah had instilled in Evelyn a strong sense of determination and resilience. Her father had been hardworking, and her mother had worked multiple jobs to provide for her. Evelyn had learned to be independent and resourceful from a young age.

Growing up in a family of modest financial means, Evelyn carried her father's words with her:

"Somebody has to remind everybody that anybody can make a difference, even a nobody".

The home of Evelyn's parents was peaceful and loving—a place where industriousness, discipline, and respect were highly prized. Each person, including Evelyn, had to work on their weaknesses and struggle to keep them in check.

From the time she was a small, lovely baby girl, Evelyn had always proven to be a “wished-for or desired child” to her parents. She grew to become an adorable teenager with good qualities because of her upbringing. She was respectful, considerate, helpful to others, and intelligent.

While she had many friends and admirers, like Anitha and Debby, others like Rita, Vanesa, and Cathren hated and bullied her because of jealousy and envy of her outstanding qualities. As she navigated her way from junior high school to the work environment, she continued to be bullied by others, yet she endured. Still, many loved Evelyn for her endearing qualities.

As she grew older, Evelyn developed a passion for learning and self-improvement. She spent hours reading books and taking online courses in various subjects, conducting research and asking questions to improve her knowledge. She learned to accept good advice from her elders and associated with reasonable, kind people; her friendship with these loyal friends grew. As a multitalented girl, Evelyn taught herself many new skills that helped build her character.

She learned to speak her tribal language, the common language of those around her, the official language, and sign language for the deaf. She could also read level two Braille. Seeing the potential in their daughter, her parents encouraged and supported her in every way they could.

Evelyn became a self-driven, analytical, and confident individual with a strong sense of self-discipline.

Her upbringing shaped her into a person with a strong work ethic and a desire to succeed. She built a life on her own terms, working hard to create a better future for herself and her parents.

Now, as she hung onto the surface of a wrecked ship, her past seemed like a distant memory. The present was all that mattered: survival. With a deep breath, Evelyn steeled herself for the unknown. She had to survive. She continued to scan her surroundings, looking for any signs of the wreckage that might be useful or any help in sight. The vast expanse of the ocean stretched out before her—a seemingly endless blue horizon. Evelyn's journey had just begun, and she had no idea what lay ahead.

With a newfound sense of determination, she began to scan her surroundings again. She knew she had to act fast or risk being lost at sea forever.

For hours, Evelyn held on to the floating debris as if her life depended on it. The muscles in her arms were burning intensely. Hunger and thirst were exhausting her. Every second that passed, she felt like letting go, but she had so much to offer, and giving up was not a choice she would settle on. She had to remind herself that she could make a difference and that she could survive. That determination was what she had to act on to make it a reality. She had seen and lived through worse days, and giving up wasn't an option then, nor would it be now!

Rise of the Alpha Female. UBI Fredrick

Gradually, the waves pushed her toward land. She was becoming weaker by the minute and her hands could not hold on much longer. As she frantically searched for her next line of action, Evelyn's eyes caught a glimpse of a figure in the distance.

“Could it be...? Am I finally going to find help?”

She wondered.

Exhausted, Evelyn's heart skipped a beat as she squinted, trying to make out the figure. And then, everything went black.

When Evelyn came to, she was met with unfamiliar faces and a sense of unease.

“Where am I? And... who are you people?”

A mature woman, along with her companions, had helped fish Evelyn out of the water when she blacked out. They brought her to safety and resuscitated her on the seashore.

Though weak, she regained consciousness but could not stand on her own. So, they carried her to their settlement to stabilize her and give her the needed attention. As she was being taken, Evelyn could do little more than look on helplessly. With a kind face and an empathetic expression, the mature woman looked at Evelyn with a mixture of curiosity and concern.

"Welcome to Kyrallion!"

She said, her voice firm but gentle.

"You're safe now."

Trying to process her surroundings, Evelyn's mind reeled.

“Kyrallion!?! ... Where... and... what kind of place is Kyrallion?”

Chapter 2: Island of No Return

For days, Evelyn rested, and when she finally woke up, she looked around and noticed the unfamiliar surroundings. She was in a small hut, surrounded by women who seemed to be watching her every move. One was checking her vital signs. Then, more women came along to see her as others made preparations to assist the woman who was attending to her.

Among them, three women stood out. The mature woman who had spoken to her days ago was presumably the leader of the group. She was a mature white woman in her 50s with curly white hair. She stepped forward:

"Hi! I am Kamouri. I am the matriarchal head. I am called the Alpha,"

she said.

"You are now in Kyrallion. You've been with us for a few days and we've been taking care of you. You're safe here. You can remain with us as long as you wish".

Evelyn's mind was foggy, but she tried to piece together what had happened. She remembered the shipwreck, and then, nothing. How did she end up here? she wondered.

"Where am I?"

Evelyn asked, trying to sit up. Nudging her, Kharia, a warm-brown-skinned woman, aged 62 with short dark hair, gently pushed her back down.

"You need to rest,"

Kharia said.

"You've been through a lot. We'll explain everything to you when you're feeling better".

Evelyn nodded, feeling a mix of gratitude and weakness. She didn't know these people or their intentions, but for now, she had no choice but to trust them. Later, Evelyn was told who the three women were: Kamouri is the Alpha, the head of the matriarchal leaders. The other two matriarchal leaders were Kharia, the adjudicator, and Ky' Ayla, who is the guardian. There were other matriarchal leaders who were not present, but these were the most prominent of them all.

As the days passed, Evelyn grew stronger. She learned that Kyrallion was a matriarchal society, where women held the power and made the decisions. The island was self-sufficient, with its own farms, livestock, and artisans. The people were fishers and farmers with a rich heritage beyond what they knew. The women were skilled in various trades, from fishing to weaving.

Evelyn was fascinated by the island's culture and way of life. Although Evelyn wished to return to her world and her people, she was determined to learn the ways of these people and contribute to the community as a means of expressing her appreciation for saving her. Kamouri, sensing her eagerness, decided to speak with the other matriarchal leaders about Evelyn. The matriarchal leaders agreed to welcome Evelyn into their midst and teach her all there was to know.

Later, Kharia and Kaybri, an elderly and kind, loving matriarchal leader, both came to Evelyn and told her the decision of the matriarchal leaders.

“It pleases us to let you know that the council of the matriarchal leaders has accepted that you can be taught in our ways”.

“Yes, you can get to know our culture and all there is to know about the island of Kyrallion and its people”.

The next day, Kamouri came to Evelyn and began to teach her various skills, from farming to self-defense. As Evelyn learned and grew, she began to feel a sense of belonging on the island. She formed close bonds with the women, particularly Kamouri, who became a mentor and friend. But she couldn't shake the feeling that there was more to the island than what she was being told.

One night, as she walked along the beach, Evelyn stumbled upon a hidden cove. In the center of the cove was a small boat, partially hidden by the rocks. It looked seaworthy, and Evelyn felt a sudden urge to explore it. What secrets lay hidden in the cove? What would happen if I decide to take the boat and sail into the unknown? Evelyn thought to herself.

As she approached the boat, Evelyn heard a voice behind her.

"You're not thinking of leaving us, are you?"

Kamouri asked, her eyes gleaming in the moonlight. Evelyn's heart skipped a beat. How did Kamouri know? What would happen if I tried to leave? Evelyn asked herself. Evelyn smiled, trying to appear nonchalant.

"I was just admiring the boat,"

she said.

"It's beautiful".

Kamouri's expression softened.

"I'm glad you like it. We've been working on restoring it for a while now".

Evelyn's curiosity got the better of her.

"What's its story?"

she asked, her eyes fixed on the boat. Kamouri leaned against the rocks, her eyes gazing out at the sea.

"It's an old fishing boat,"

she said.

"One of our elders found it wrecked on the shore years ago. We've been fixing it up ever since".

Evelyn nodded, her mind racing with questions, but she didn't press the issue, sensing that Kamouri was being cautious.

As the days passed, Evelyn longed to return to her life, her family, and her friends. However, that possibility continued to die off, knowing that the island was isolated and it was unlikely people would come by because it was hidden. Also, she was told that no one had ever left the island.

"But... how would you know, since they wouldn't come back to tell you they made it to the other side?"

Evelyn would always ask innocently with curiosity. This question would always go unanswered.

Hence, Evelyn decided to learn the ways of the islanders and grow on the island. She formed close bonds with the women; Keira and her twin sister, Keaira, became close friends of hers, along with their younger sister, Kenaya. Evelyn's skills improved dramatically, but she couldn't shake the feeling that there was more to the island than what she was being told.

One evening, as she sat with Kamouri on the beach, Evelyn decided to broach the subject.

"Kamouri, can I ask you something?"

she said, her voice low.

"Of course, Evelyn,"

Kamouri replied, her eyes sparkling in the firelight.

"What is it?"

"What do you know about the outside world?"

Evelyn asked, her voice barely above a whisper.

"I mean, beyond the island".

Kamouri's expression turned serious.

"We know enough,"

she said.

"We've had visitors before. We've learned to be self-sufficient and protect ourselves".

Evelyn sensed that there was more to the story, but Kamouri wasn't willing to share. She decided to drop the subject, but her mind was racing with questions.

As the night wore on, Evelyn realized that she was beginning to love the island and its people. She decided to stay longer on the island and continue to learn and grow with the community. She felt a new sense of belonging and purpose from her new experiences. The women of Kyralion had taken her in and taught her valuable skills, and she was determined to contribute to the community and make a difference.

As she threw herself into her work and activities, Evelyn began to find happiness, and it was fun for her. It was like she was exploring a new field of life. She looked forward to every moment. She formed close bonds with the women, and they became like a family to her. She learned to appreciate the simple things in life and found joy in the beauty of nature and the kindness of the people around her.

Kamouri became a mentor and a friend to Evelyn, teaching her about leadership and responsibility. Evelyn proved to be a quick learner, and soon she was taking on more responsibilities and contributing to the community in meaningful ways. On the other hand, Ky' Ayla taught Evelyn tactical skills on survival in the wild and at sea.

As time passed, Evelyn realized that she had found a new home on the island. She had found a sense of purpose and belonging, and she was determined to make the most of it. The days turned into weeks, and the weeks turned into months. Evelyn grew stronger and more confident, and she began to see the island as her own. She knew that she would always carry the memories of her past with her, but she was excited about the future and the possibilities of what lay ahead.

One day, Kamouri, together with Kharia and another matriarchal leader, Kaybri, all approached Evelyn with serious looks on their faces.

"Evelyn, I want to talk to you about something important,"

Kharia said.

"What's on your minds?"

Evelyn asked, feeling a sense of trepidation.

"We think it's time for you to take on a leadership role in the community. Your skill sets are outstanding," Kamouri said.

"You've grown into a strong and capable woman, and we believe you have the potential to make a real difference here".

"Yes, Evie, the truth is, we need you,"

Kaybri added, with a little bit of unsettledness and pleading.

Evelyn was taken aback, but she felt a surge of excitement and gratitude. She knew that this was an opportunity she couldn't miss. So, she was determined to do her best.

Evelyn accepted the assignment and tried to prove herself. She did well, consulting those with more experience and learning from the corrections of others. With Kamouri's guidance and support, Evelyn threw herself into her new role. She worked hard to learn the ins and outs of leadership and to make a positive impact on the community.

As she looked out at the island and its people, Evelyn knew that she had made the right decision. She had found a new home, a new family, and a new sense of purpose. And she was excited to see what the future held. Thus, Evelyn embraced her new role and the opportunities that lay ahead, surrounded by the women of Kyrallion who had become her family. Firstly, Kharia educated Evelyn on the history of the island and the people.

Chapter 3: Stranded in a Strange Land

“Long ago,”

Kharia started slowly, her voice laced with melancholy.

“Some refugees of mixed race were fleeing from their homeland due to the raging war. For their lineage to continue, the men—our fathers—offered a sacrifice so costly for us to see today. The ultimate sacrifice.”

Kharia paused, as silent tears dripped from her eyes, revealing her deep emotions as she relived the past all over again. Evelyn could not help but imagine the pain of losing a loved one, as cherished memories of her beloved father, Ethan, flashed across her mind.

“They risked their lives to save their wives and children. Some of the women were pregnant. All the men but one stayed back. He was Kendrick. He was allowed to leave because he was wounded and his wife, Kyra, was pregnant at the time. Kendrick was to lead the women and children to safety in a faraway place, away from the world where the wars would hardly reach.”

Evelyn listened eagerly as Kharia continued. With a stable tone, Kharia told Evelyn the origin of the name Kyralion.

Rise of the Alpha Female. UBI Fredrick

“Kyra was a courageous and strong-willed woman. She had a masculine stature and was feared by people when she was angry. At the time of their arrival, the land was crawling with many kinds of animals, including wild animals. Kyra was the only one who could face the animals head-on and fight them.”

With emphatic gestures, Kharia eagerly dramatized the next events as if she were reenacting them all over again.

“One day, a male lion made its way to the settlement of the islanders and injured some women and children. Kyra, despite her pregnancy, faced the lion and fought it.

It was a tough battle, and she was greatly injured, but in the end, she killed the lion. Thereafter, the people held her in high esteem and looked up to her for direction, as their protector and their head.”

In her mind’s eye, Evelyn could cyber-render and see every detail of the events—the action-packed moment that sent chills down her spine. She could feel the power and tension in every muscle that was stretched, and hear the sound of strength in Kyra’s yell and the lion’s roar as Kharia narrated.

“After her heroic duel-to-the-death with the lion, in which she prevailed, the islanders decided to name the island after her for her acts of bravery, courage, and valor. They called the island Kyra-Lion.”

Evelyn continued to nod in understanding as Kharia spoke. She explained how the animals were pushed into the woods and were theirs for hunting. Inquisitively, Evelyn asked,

“Have you people explored the island to know if you have neighbors or if there are other lands?”

Kharia then said in reply,

“Kyralion is an island in the middle of nowhere. With rugged hilltops blanketed with thick foliage and forest, its copious vegetation covers most of the island. There are some rocky and barren woodlands in other areas. The island is large and has lush, tropical areas with some plains and some underground water surfacing to form clean waterfalls in some areas.”

“Know this, Evie: when it is hot, the area is too hot. When it is cold, the area is too cold. However, despite its harsh tropical nature, the people have found a way to survive. The island's diverse geography—with rugged hills, lush tropical areas, and rocky barren woodlands—makes the island a blessing. Closest to Kyralion is a neighboring island with a mountain stretching into the sky. The distance between the two islands is 3.2 km, and the bearing of the mountainous island is NNE of Kyralion Island.”

Evelyn wondered how she knew these precisions, and the incredulous look in Evelyn's eyes was noticed.

“Any questions, Evie?”

Kharia asked. Evelyn replied,

“Ehm! Sorry, I'm not sure I was following. I seem to have been distracted by my thoughts. Could you please go through the points again? Or... never mind.”

Kharia looked at Evelyn with love for her sincerity and politeness and asked Evelyn to summarize the points she was able to grasp so far. Evelyn narrated in an outstanding way, saying:

Rise of the Alpha Female. UBI Fredrick

“Kyrallion Island is a breathtakingly beautiful and lush tropical paradise, nestled in the heart of the ocean. The island's landscape is characterized by crystal-clear turquoise waters surrounding the island, teeming with marine life, coral reefs, and vibrant fish species. Its pristine white sand beaches line the shores, gently sloping into the calm waters, creating secluded coves and picturesque bays. With its dense, lush, emerald-green forests covering the interior of the island, and towering trees, exotic plants, and vines that stretch toward the sky, the island is a piece of beauty seen from the sky.”

“It is believed that our predecessors met some ancient ruins scattered throughout the island—hidden temples and mysterious structures whispering tales of a long-lost civilization. The island is home to a wide variety of wildlife, including exotic birds, colorful butterflies, and unique species found nowhere else on earth.”

“The island's atmosphere is alive with the sounds of nature, and the scent of exotic flowers and saltwater fills the air. The climate is warm and tropical, with gentle trade winds that bring a sense of serenity to the island.

Kyralion Island is a place of wonder, where the boundaries between the island and the outside world are blurred. It's a place where the inhabitants live in harmony with nature, respecting the land and its secrets.”

“Yes, we the islanders are known for our ways, as could be seen in our rich cultural heritage. We have a deep connection to our ancestors and the land, which is reflected in our vibrant culture, traditional practices, and beliefs. The island is a strong matriarchal society led by a council of wise and powerful women who have maintained the balance and harmony of the island for generations and have passed on the culture. We have learned to live with the rhythms of nature, adapting to the changing tides, seasons, and challenges that come with living on a remote island. Truly, Kyralion as an island is a place of beauty and wonder, where the old and the new coexist in harmony and the female rules supreme.”

Like an orator, Evelyn's mind had processed the information so perfectly that Kharia was amazed. To help her flow with her narration, Evelyn closed her eyes as she gestured while speaking. At a point, she started translating her speech into sign language synchronously. People around started coming in to see and hear her, and many came to like her just a little more.

Not until she finished and opened her eyes did she notice the crowded audience she had unconsciously attracted. They welcomed her with a resounding applause and a standing ovation. Some matriarchal leaders who were present commended her for her intelligence.

“She spoke like a matriarchal leader. Is she one?”

Some of the islanders asked. Others were saying,

“Make her one.”

No doubt, in Evelyn's mind, she found it difficult to understand some of the island's customs and traditions—why they continue to pass on some traditions and why some ways are as they are.

Kharia's attention was needed by the people, so they ended the lesson as Kharia went to attend to a matter. That night, as Evelyn lay down, she had some unanswered questions. Evelyn couldn't shake the feeling that she was being watched. She looked around the hut but saw nothing out of the ordinary. Suddenly, she heard a faint scratching sound coming from outside. It was soft, but it sent a shiver down her spine.

The ocean doesn't just take; it commands.

In the 21st century, Evelyn Ethan's world was one of high-stakes engineering and robotic precision. But when a catastrophic shipwreck splinters her reality, she is cast into the heart of the deep—waking on the shores of Kyrallion, an island where ancient wonders whispers through the palms and the tides hold the secrets of an un-indexed past.

In this secluded sanctuary, women are the architects of survival and the keepers of the flame. Led by the matriarchal Alpha, Kamouri, the society of Kyrallion thrives on a delicate balance of strength and wisdom. But as Evelyn—the outsider with a mind forged in logic—begins to bridge the divide between her world and theirs, a simmering tension threatens to ignite.

As a shadowy conspiracy begins to ablate the island's traditions, Evelyn is forced to step into a role she never sought. With the emergence of a lethal internal threat and the discovery of a hidden history, she must ask:

When the old world calls you back, do you return to the wreckage, or do you rise to lead the new dawn?

The future isn't just coming to Kyrallion. It's already washing up on the shore.
